Mexicans, who killed, wounded or captured practically the whole of a little guard of cavalrymen, will compel an immediate change in the policy of the Washington administration. Tragic proof has been given that while Gen. Pershing's army, far from its base, is pursuing Villa, Americans living along the border are at the mercy of every armed band bent upon murder or robbery. It has not been positively determined whether the hundred, more or living along the sorted and the second of the sec of every armed band bent upon murder or robbery. Presumably a new policy will be formulated in Washington without delay, and unless it is decided to withdraw our long drawn out line engaged in the hunt for Villa to the border for its protection, the neglected mobilization of the militia it would seem must inevitably be undertaken. Why it was not done at the very start of the punitive expedition is inex-plicable. Now, however, duty lies plainly before the government. Mexican invasion of the United States must be stopped.
